Problem Statement

During the daily routine of Bus repair, a fluke accident occurs leaving a lone mechanic pinned under the front of a mini bus. Using the equipment available, the individual first aider must lend a hand and their knowledge to treat this mechanic after freeing him from under the bus. This is accomplished by using a pump jack to gain access and free the mechanic.

Casualty SimulationPATIENT ONE

Appearance - traditional auto mechanic

CONSCIOUS but rapidly decreasing level of awareness

Signs of shock - SWEATING; PALE

LACERATION to the underside of LEFT forearm

FRACTURED RIB caused by a wrench (or alike) having been pressed against chest

Glass Fragments across Chest (nothing embedded)

History

Somehow the jack used to elevate the bus lowered itself, pinning the mechanic between the cart that they were laying on and the bus above them. During the process of work, the mechanic had left a wrench on their chest to keep it in hands reach during their work. They also had a mechanic's lamp under the bus with them.

As the bus lowered, the lamp broke, scattering glass across their chest and one piece of glass caught the mechanic near their left eye socket. Lacerated left forearm and a fractured rib, due to the weight of the bus on the wrench are additional injuries sustained.
